MOTERŲ SĄJUNGA

by Jonas Kmitas

A fourth of a century — somewhat a long time
Since the peerless Women's Alliance
Was formed, and still survives —
The great strength of emigrants.

Numerous their ranks and all devoted.
Lithuania, our motherland rejoiced;
Ancient Vilnius breathed more easily,
Its weary head relaxed.

It recognizes women's spiritual force,
Skilled they are in working miracles:
They raise a nation's dead from graves,
Post children of Vytautas in command.

Guardians thru centuries of their nation's [wealth,
Our language, songs, customs, riddles —
Kindled by ancestors since eternity,
Bequeathed to our beloved mothers.

And to the children they imparted stirring words,
Uncovered beauty in folklore;
Taught them perseverence, showed the way
Thru the winding paths of life.

They sang about the heroes' journeys,
And the oak's century of dreams,
They breathed courage to redeem freedom,
They developed spirit within giants.

Departing for other countries — tender shoots,
[strong,
A small group reached this land
With tiny dowries of their earth, seeds of rue
To blossom here for them, as the seeds grew
[green in Lithuania.

But greener yearnings are in their hearts,
A wealth of many years marked there.
In their souls they bear a spring
Where children may draw love for their homeland.

They enlighten themselves, employ themselves,
[read, write.
Useful journals they publish for all
Spreading fruitful labors and deeds.
Fiery their hearts and active are their minds.

The skies in Lithuania have darkened again,
A spear has been thrust into its freedom.
Now Mars puts on an iron mask
And behold! the planes of war will come.

The cruel Pole seals our mouth
Now to mention Vilnius is prohibited.
Strangling the borders of Vilnius it mutters
That all our nation must be annihilated.

Illustrious Women's Alliance! Take up the burden
To recover Vilnius. Here we are free,
Let us renew our service to our country
As we have done in former years.

When the Russian tyrant racked Lithuania
Words for her freedom we dared to voice.
Now, is not the white eagle stifling Lithuania?
Then let us summon our courage again to speak.

When cruelly bathed in blood the world will be,
Truth and Love scorned everywhere,
Violent blows our nation strike,
Then Hope is turned towards women.
